Formation of Class Distinction Will Cause Upheaval, Declares Senator from Idaho.

"And now, gentlemen, we shall sing Dam, dam, dam the old Potomac."

Thus ruled with feariess voice S. S. Adams, toastmaster at the Founders' Day banquet of the Georgetown University Alumni in the New Willard last night.

A hush fell overall About 300 heads turned to the d'honneurs;" then came a storm of protest and demands for an explanation. "What do you mean?" "Here's where we get in bad." "Do you want to raise another Carabao row?" were some of the astonished inquiries. It seemed for a moment as if the merry evening was to find a sorry and embarrassing end. But, undaunted by the queries from the protestants, Toastqueries from the protestants from the protestant from the A hush fell over the assemblage. About 300 heads turned to the "maitre d'honneurs;" then came a storm of pro-by the national board of censorship.

And then he read the song.

Little did "the boys" hesitate to comply with the toastmaster's "ruling" after he had read it, and as the mighty chorus of 200 voices joined in the "Dam, Dam," another chapter was being added to the large book of parodies on the song which only recently stirred up a sensation in army and navy circles. The principal speech of the evening made by Senator W. E. Borah. Idaho. While the rest of the ad-es dealt with light subjects, such dresses dealt with light subjects, such as reminiscences of college days, jokes and funny stories, Senator Borah took occasion to dwell for a few minutes on the theme of patriotism, with special reference to the American Constitution. On the whole his speech was of an optimistic strain, the Senator referring in particular to what he termed the abin particular to what he termed the ab-solute loyalty and high patriotism of the members of Congress, who he said have but the country's welfare at heart. In speaking, however, of the ever-grow-ing formation of classes in this country, and the spile between spaired and these
